For your old (or young) woman

THE Second Front is in full swing. The war advances on all fronts—except ours. The sands of Time are shifting. The old world keeps revolving. And the fourth tooth of the third Jungle Book appears. We are little men, getting on.

It seems a long time ago since we sat round the lamp at Keeleigh, with the music of mosquitoes in our ears, making our plans. Then when 67 and 69 suddenly went off on holiday, we were left all alone with only smiles to encourage and cheer us. Many a nightmare followed, many an Indian printing press was upturned. BUT THE MAGAZINE CAME OUT. So this creature was born. Are you going to keep it alive, for if you don’t each and every one buy, it will perish!

What we want you really to do, however, is to send a copy back home each month to your old (or young) woman. That should be worth at least half a dozen letters. She will be thrilled to death. It will give her something to blow about and crow about, and dream about. She will sleep with it under a proud pillow.

Most of our experimenting has ceased now. We know where you stand. Contributions are coming in like snowflakes through a window. The senior Sub-Editor, Dik, spends a busy time pouring over the pin-up girls we hope to bring you. He has taken to cutting his hair. Dik is a beautifully ugly little man with a Plymouth Hoe moustachio. His humour is as acid drops. Bitter and sweet. He is continually submitting articles which our censor rejects. Funny stories about Lord Louis, and horror stories about the goings-on at G.H.Q., Delhi. He was born in Australia, yet he is a Welshman with a London accent. Work that out. Journalism is his bread and butter profession. His Alma Mater the Daily Sketch. The dirty African Star on his shirt looks like a drop of goat gravy.

However, we want to dedicate this issue to our old (and young) women, not to the senior Sub-Editor. We don’t forget them. Although American newspapers may call Commandos “killers” we are not really. We don’t mind throwing a few Yanks (or M.P.s) through plate-glass windows now and then for fun, but we’re not killers, hub. Oh no! We love our women!

The Editor.
Soldiers of the Empire

The West African Forces

by Lt.-Col. K. R. S. TREVOR

It has taken this war to compel the uninitiated to realise the vast importance of West Africa as an integral part of the British Empire. But even in the knowledge of its general importance, there still remains many who have not given a thought to what these material sources are. What do you know of the West African peoples and their customs? What do you know of its armed forces?

Already part of this Brigade has had the good fortune to meet and serve alongside the West Africans, and it can be said with safety that our troops will return with glowing reports of their combined activity and successes.

One of the regiments which forms part of the West African Forces is the Nigeria Regiment. It is recruited and raised in Nigeria which is the largest area controlled by the British. The regiment is composed of men from all Nigeria’s many provinces but the majority come from the famous Hausa country—a tract of land lying between Lake Chad and the Niger. The Hausa is an energetic agricultural type known for his enterprising spirit and strong trading instincts. Of strong physique and steeped in a fine fighting tradition. Not to be depreciated are the other tribes—from Mursis to Pajans who serve side by side with the Hausas.

The Munshi is a shorter squatter man but still tall when judged by our standards. With his face cut and scarred with tribal emblems and his teeth filed to points he presents a formidable picture. In the Abyssinian campaign the Italians were terrified of him as they were under the impression that those rows of sharpened teeth were ultimately destined for “It runnich.”

On joining the regiment the Africans have two names, the first being his normal one and the second the name of his home town. As many of the southern tribes have been converted into the Christian faith it is not uncommon to discover names such as John Ibadan, Joshua Benue, etc. (A similar system in this Brigade would end in chaos!)

The language spoken by the West African in the army is a constant source of humour. Although the recognised language is Hausa it has such a limited range of expression and one word has so many shades of meaning that pidgin English is sometimes employed. Don’t think that because you can speak English you can speak the pidgin version. Just try these sentences for a start:

The phrase “He be plenty big man.” He catchum plenty good chop. Time he give me chop it be small small. He be like me too much.”

If you can understand these phrases you will be well on your way to proficiency in pidgin speaking. Pidgin may mean the opposite to what is intended. For instance, the irate African (note not Nigger) once said to his boss, “You think I understand nothing. I tell you I know damn all.”

SEEING STARS

by Canopus

THIS month let us take a look at Scorpio, or the Scorpion. Scorpio is one of the signs of the Zodiac and one of the most prominent constellations at present visible. This group of stars can be seen, between sunset and midnight, well up in the sky to the South, moving across to the South-West.

A glance at the diagram should enable you to pick him out. Scorpio is one of the few constellations to bear a slight resemblance to its name. Two prominent twin stars, set close together, form his sting, and from these a line of stars rather like an inverted question mark curves up to three stars which form the head and pincers. In the centre of his back are three stars in line, the central star of these being Antares, a red star of the first magnitude and one of the largest stars in the firmament.

The following facts and figures will give you some idea of its magnitude. The sun has a volume one and a quarter million times that of the earth and has a diameter of 800,000 miles. Antares has a diameter of 420,000,000 (yes, four hundred and twenty million!) miles.

When looking for these various constellations it will help you if you remember that each evening the stars rise four minutes earlier. They rise from the East to the West. Thus, at some seasons, various constellations will not be seen, as they pass through our line of vision at the daytime and are obscured by the greater brilliance of that day star—the sun.

MUSIC OF A FRENCHMAN

by the MASTERSINGER

NOW that France is in a fair way to recapture her country and her soul, our thoughts, naturally enough, turn to French music and musicians. It seems likely that in a people like the French the dark days of slavery will help give birth to some of the loveliest music of the future, for the French are great masters in exploiting the tragic. So I would like to speak about Debussy in this issue, for he is typical of what I mean.

'Je ne demande pas un amour, Je veux seulement un seul baiser, Qui ne brûle pas, qui ne brûle pas.'

That formula of Verlaine's is what we find Debussy working out in music. He is vague and mysterious, macabre and yet strangely beautiful. He writes in a suppressed tone, yet underneath it all we can scent the wild passionate heart of the French. His music is as ferocious and natural as Wagner's in effect, but it has got none of his brutal realism. It is the music of a people as red-blooded as the German, but more restrained...... Debussy's music, apparently sophisticated and seductive, is, in some way, really sincere, and wistful. You can recognise it by the long melancholy harmonies, the repressed passionate quivering of the strings. Where you feel you want to get up and play your French horns fortissimo, Debussy muffles them into a husky pianissimo. Deux et expressif. Soft and expressive.

Do you recall the delicate fabric of his 'Afternoon of a Fawn,' or the rich beauty of his 'Moonlight'? The piano piece 'The Cathedral Under the Sea'? His 'Arabesques,' 'Rainy Garden,' 'Evening in Grenade,' 'The Girl with the Flaxen Hair'? The Human Family owes a lot to this Frenchman.
REPLIES TO YOUR LIVE LETTERS

Why do the local villagers beat their blasted drums all night? and why are there so many kids always hanging around the camp? "ANNOYED", 66

Well, your guess is as good as ours for the first one, but the men probably hang the drums to drown their wives' "mutterings"! As for the second query, we can only quote you a well-known little ballad, sung to the tune of "Just like the Ivy on the old garden wall." It goes like this (tasty words deleted, of course).

Dockyard waifs' children, sitit' on the dockyard wall,
Just like their fa-thers, doing gosh-all.
When they grow up, they'll be dockyard marines too,
Just like their fa-thers, gosh-all to do.

"Your magazine is becoming too much like "Dazzle". Can't you make it a little more refined?" "NORBY", 91

Gor blimey, they told us last time we were too much like Piddletrench church magazine. When we stop swinging we'll strike an hilarious chauvinist—we mean, of course, a happy medium.

Settle an argument, George. How many kinds of earned beef are there on the market? "ANXIOUS", 67

You ought to know. You've had 'em all.

A party went to the beach for a swim the other day. I was a member, and we were amused to see some beautiful white birds there, but they disappeared into thin air as we came up. What do you think could be the explanation? "NATURE LOVER", 86

What you saw was a mirage—possibly reflected from Blackpool.

You seem to have set yourself up as a "Daily Mirror" wise guy, but we think you're pretty weak. Can you answer this? Some of us up here in the jungle keep hearing a bird or animal at night, sounding something like water dripping on a sheet of corrugated iron. What do you know about it? "SCOTTIE, TOM, SPIKE", 67

Sure, it's the boys back here you've been hearing. They're always dipping about something or other. (Actually, it is a woodpecker pecking wood.)

MANCHESTER

by ERIC LANGLEY

It is a far cry from India to Cottonopolis; but how often in the recent months have the thoughts of Manchesterians gone back to that much maligned climate? And let me now, before we go any further, correct the impression that the unenlightened Southerner has of our climate. Although it has been known to rain from time to time in Manchester the vast majority of the raincoats and umbrellas manufactured there go to meet the requirements of the "Scally South"! But should you happen to visit Manchester on a wet day there are plenty of attractions to while away your time.

Manchester's pubs are the most hospitable in the world. What memories the mention of "Tommie Ducks" or the "Fatted Calf" conjure up for many of us. Good beer, better company, and more often than not an impromptu concert thrown in. Yes, Manchester understands what a pub should be. And for those who know their way around there are still houses where cheese and biscuits, or even Lancashire hot-pot (not forgetting the red cabbage) can be had "on the house."

If pubs do not appeal to you there is a wealth of other entertainment, Belle Vue combining Zoological Gardens, boxing, speedway, swimming and fireworks and a large fairground, all in one place. Or one can skate at the Ice Palace; watch first-class football at Maine or Warwick Road; see, in the season, cricket at Old Trafford, scene of many Test Match struggles. For the more serious the Hallé Orchestra, one of the country's finest, has its permanent home in Manchester. Perhaps the Art Gallery in Mosley Street or the Museum in Oxford Road will attract you. All these places are within a stone's throw, almost, of Piccadilly, heart of Manchester. It is a rather changed Piccadilly since the blitzes but in some respects the Hun was kind to Manchester. Much of the property destroyed in the city area was old and due for demolition; Manchester has quickly cleaned and healed her wounds and will emerge a finer city in post-war days.

A strange sidelight on the bombings was the survival of the "Old Wellington" Inn in the shambles. Hundreds of years old, this pub, with its black and white timbered, pop-hole windows, and bulging walls, survived while its new steel and concrete neighbours crashed to the ground.

Few people think of Manchester as a port, but a very important one it is. It is a strange sight indeed to see destroyers in Manchester! But before the war destroyers came along the Ship Canal to pay an annual visit to us. Here mention must be made of Salford, Manchester's twin city, for in Salford are the docks proper. The canal, by this time, has crossed the great aqueduct, a marvel of engineering skill capable of taking three thousand ton ships—yet built during the reign of Queen Victoria! In those days Manchester was in its prime, growing rapidly from a market town to a mighty city. In those days Market Street, then called Market Hill Lane was, as its name implies, a market. Mosley Street was a fashionable residential area; and St. Peter's Church stood on the site of the War Memorial. It was here that the "Battle of Peterloo" was fought.

The set reads puzzle many visitors used to the concrete slabs of other cities. These granite sets are, however, a necessary addition to the horse-drawn traffic which forms such a feature of Manchester's streets. A few years ago great wagons laden with bulging cotton bales—in a way which would break an M.T.O.'s heart—rumbled in an endless procession through the streets behind the glistening shire horses. Now, with the decline of the cotton trade and the advent of cheap motor transport, these magnificent beasts are rapidly disappearing.

Ah well... Manchester may be outwardly a grim old city, but underneath her coating of smuts she is as cheerful as most. And if London keeps on thinking tomorrow what Manchester thinks today—she will not go far wrong.

Contributors please note!

THE EDITOR'S life is being rapidly made shorter (stop cheering!) because of the time he has to spend deciphering pencil manuscripts written on, or—well you know. He is also being driven farther and farther around the bend trying to fit odd shaped drawings into the contours of the magazine.

So will you please follow these points as far as you can under the (usually adverse) circumstances.

Contributions should be typewritten and on ONE side of the paper only.

They should be kept as short as possible.

Drawings should be of a size that can conveniently fit into the page proportions.

Who's this? Looks like the bloke who's been supplying Hitler with wolf packs! Snarkle! No! It's Mona Lisa's brother or... never, of course! We should have known! It's "Nobby Atkins" himself. Now who was the photographer who turned a "deng" stryce into auster of female hearts? Etrsha!

That's right, Sheba, next 'on good and hard. The neck of it! Sitting on a lady's, left without so much as "by your leave" and me with nothing on, too! Leave your chin alone, Yea. Can't you see what he's doing, Him? Anyway, "Buzz," Dick and Henry are content to sit at her feet with the war.

"Ha ha, here we go. Etrsha don't know what I'm laughing at!" Something pretty good, no doubt, but we can guess it. DEVIL. "Red Rock" Vecker has had a shave and a wash instead of a blogrench. Right? Sure, we knew it was.

Poets' Pleasure

Nostalgia

Though England's very far away,
My thoughts are ever there;
I think of all the things I miss
These things that I hold dear.

I long for things peculiar
To England's sake alone.
For English climate, English scenes,
No other land can man.

I long to ramble over hills,
Through meadows fresh and green,
To see the waving, golden corn,
With poppies in between.

To wonder through a country lane,
Just as the sun sinks low,
To breathe rain-sweetened air again,
Pure air, that I miss so.

I miss that cool and shady tree,
Besides the rippling stream,
Where, with a book, and well-smoked briar,
I used to laze and dream.

These things I miss, and many more—
Yet, do I hope to gain?
That soon—how soon I'd like to know—
These will be mine again?

When they're on parade at nine,
And they're standing there in line,
And there's only forty-two there when
There should be forty-three.

With a grim determined look I write
"one absent" in the book,
And that clears me...

When I've got them on fatigue,
And they're sounding on intruce,
To just break off and have a mug of tea,
With a look that's stern and dirty,
I write "ten men, ten thirs"... and that clears me...

When I'm making out the details,
The Lance Corporals get some beauties,
Why the fuss.
For there's more of them than us! And later when they learn,
That they're done one out of turn.
I just cross it off the book,
And that clears me...

The Lance Corporals do Main Guard,
Piquet and all that's hard,
But sometimes these duties fall on me;
But I falter that all right,
For I sleep right through the night.
But I rise about next morning,
And that clears me...

Little Poems—4

You who were my lover know
That I am still your lover now.
I told the dark that in the sky,
And asked from him a melody:
The twilit nightingale as well
Within the covert of his dell,
To him I told my secret, too,
And begged of him to sing for you.

So when you hear these summer days
The little skylark's kynon of praise?
And when you see these summer nights
Have you the nightingale delights?
Remember this I have said—
My love, it lives: it is not dead:
Not ever bid: not ever told:
O praise be God, I love you still!

Drum Up! Drum Up!

(With Apologies to Sir H. Newman)

There's a weary Troop on the march tonight
Two miles to go and fifteen done.
On a jungle track with no end in sight
We've trampled all day 'neath a blazing sun.
And the thought in each head, is not of a bed,
Or a woman, or the food that is lame,
But in every mind there's a thought unsaid:
Drum up! Drum up! Let's brew again.

Sgt. Taylor, Intelligence, please.

Get ready gals... here come the landing craft.
THE THIRD JUNGLE BOOK
G.P. to do full justice to his weekly labour, yet this just has to be done under the present system. No, I'm not for State medicine.

Pte. C. Scott, 30, married with one child, from Glasgow, then put in a word. For the first two years of the war, this enthusiastic little man was in charge of one-third of the A.R.P. services in the city of Glasgow, and he certainly sounded as if he knew what he was talking about! "I'm a wee bit chary of State control for it is bound to destroy initiative, and when that happens the average standard of work is lowered. I am in favour of partial control, however—for all people under a certain income—basing it on the Glasgow Public Health System, which is the only one as far as I know in Britain supplying a 24 hour a day demand. I want this system because some people haven't sufficient income (or sense) to call a doctor when required. The system of clinics within this public health system moreover is a very fine one, e.g., maternity work, because the specialists in attendance have more knowledge in their special subject than the average G.P. The G.P. would be as necessary in the State scheme, however, as the specialist, and would have a greater chance of specialising himself if thought suitable. People over the fixed-rate income need not be excluded from the State scheme unless they so desire, and doctors need not accept State jobs. But their fees should be fixed (most fairly by the medical profession itself), or there might be a medical black market. It is up to the State to see that the

THESE ARE . . .

Asks the R.A.M.C. what they think of "State Medicine."

. . . OUR PEOPLE

by LEONARD STREET

I CALLED in the other day at 68's Sick Bay to ask the R.A.M.C. in the Brigade a few questions. Typical of the rest, I found it a pleasant little whitewashed red-roofed building, and was duly impressed by the tidy array of clean bottles, and the white trays of shining instruments. The best equipment, and the best drugs, was the proud remark. "The folk at home need not have fear that their men will not be looked after. Our greatest enemy is dirt. Wherever we go, be it jungle or plain, there always seems to be bags of dust flying about. We spend most of our time spit-and-polishing," "Well, I guess it is worth it," I said. "The chaps always like to see a clean surgery."

Sitting myself down on an efficient-looking airborne-type stretcher, I then proceeded to explain the purpose of my visit. Opposite me, on the wall, was a chart showing all the horrors parts of a poisonous snake, and beside it another illustrating the life-cycle of the mosquito. These R.A.M.C. certainly meant business. "Listen," I said, "I've come to ask you boys what you think of the Government's proposed State Medical Service. Now, don't be shy. But I needn't have added that.

Big sand-bearded Cpl. A. H. Scholey, 24, single, from Rotherham, whose naked torso simply bulged with muscles, got speaking at once. "For two and a half years before the war I worked as a male nurse in mental institutions, so to a certain extent I feel well entitled to answer this. Under the present National Health System, there are a number of small extra charges which the poor man can't afford. He's got to pay sixpence or a shilling out of his own pocket for a certificate when he's not fit to work. Then it isn't always compulsory to join this system, and as a result of that very often a man's wife or children are made to suffer. If the medical profession were conscripted, and our incomes taxed carefully, and the system were made compulsory for everybody, I'm certain it would be a big improvement."

Another red-bearded medical orderly then chipped up, L/Cpl. T. H. Herbert, 25, married, from Llanwrtyd (a good man over a mile, I was told). "I worked as a manservant before the war, and having good money wasn't on the panel. I always have thought however that State medicine would be a good thing. It gives the lower classes a chance to see the best specialists, for the State specialist will just have to be good. What's more the State will have to increase the number and quality of the hospitals to keep up with the increased service. Another thing of value in a State service would be that it would be possible to have more frequent consulting hours. One doctor in a district cannot consult and look after an emergency case at the same time. Nor need any doctor be overworked in such a system—for they would work to a duty roster. It is unfair to expect an overworked underslept
HOW THE MAIL CAME THROUGH

WE were stationed in a small village on a river in the Arabian Desert. From that village to the Field Post Office was a distance of about 24 miles which had to be undertaken by the best type of boat available.

About 9 a.m., on 3rd April, I made my way to the jetty to see how I could make the journey and found that no transport was available, other than sampan, which means he would be in three or four days beforehand. I noticed a small motor boat come into the jetty. Having a signals motor boat come into the jetty, but to my sorrow, I discovered it was not returning to the F.P.O. area until 2 p.m. Just at that moment my C.O. came on the scene and asked me why I had not gone off for the mail. After I had told him the position, he “persuaded” (by fair means or foul) the N.C.O. of the motor boat to take Gregg, another Post Cpl., and I to the F.P.O.

After disembarking at the recognised place, Gregg and I walked the customary mile to the F.P.O. where 18 sacks of mail awaited Gregg, and I had 20. A truck was later used to convey the mail to the jetty where we contacted a Movement Control N.C.O., and asked him if he could provide transport for us back to camp. The trip could be done in a khaki with two willahs and a chekko for the rudder work.

It was now about 12.30 p.m., and we thought with a stroke of luck we might reach camp shortly after 3 o’clock; that was not to be. We started off with the current against us and after an hour or so we had travelled one mile to the for it! If in the so-called “New Britain” we are to have a healthy and virile race the best medical service possible must be made available to all classes. That something has been wrong is proved by the number of men who are called up suffering from diseases they could have avoided. The State Medical Service will ensure this doesn't happen in the future. If we don't get it, part of our recent sacrifices will have been in vain.

In conclusion, I asked my head into the office to see the medical officers. “What do I think of a State Medical Service?” he said. “Well, Mr. Street, if it's anything like the Army then I say to hell with it!”

My good friend's reply left me with the happy feeling that after all the officers and men of the Royal Army Medical Corps are among the most human of our people.

part of the river where it takes a right angled bend. By this time the wind had risen so now we had to contend with wind and current. After a spell at this bend we realised we were making no headway, so we told the khistiwallahs to take us to the bank. When we reached the bank Gregg and I disembarked and began pulling the khisti from the edge of the bank by means of a long rope, the wallahs doing their best to prevent its grounding. It was hard going for us as the mud on the bank was knee-deep in parts and we were continually falling either on our faces or on our bottoms.

This continued for about half a mile until we reached a small chaung which I thought would not be any more than waist-deep. I sallied into the water holding on to the rope. I was lucky as I was wearing P.T. shoes so that when I realised that the water was deeper than I had thought, I swam to the other side still holding the rope. Just as I reached the other side I heard a cry of “Help!”; on looking round all I could see was a green beret floating in the water and a few seconds later Gregg’s head appeared above the water, apparently his boots were weighing rather heavily with him. One of the wallahs jumped out of the boat and assisted him to the bank.

After a short rest, feeling utterly miserable, we continued on our way in the same manner as our khistiwallahs still could not combat the wind and current. This carried on until we reached the open river. We told the wallahs to take us across the river so that if necessary we could repeat the procedure. They managed about ten yards, then decided they could do no more and so they dropped anchor. They were prepared to wait until the tide had turned; we were not, as it was approaching dusk and, in addition to feeling miserable, we were feeling as if a good dinner would not be unwelcome, our last meal being at 7-30 a.m. Moreover, we had to remember that “full anti-malarial precautions must always be carried out.” We weighed anchor and after much good work on Gregg’s part (being a Marine unlike me), we reached the other side of the river. We dropped anchor as we had decided that a swim might ease our feelings. After ten minutes’ relaxation we prepared to set off once more.

The wallahs started off, this time at the remarkable speed of about half a mile per hour. I began to wonder what I had ever done to deserve this day’s work, for at that rate it would have been after 9 p.m. before we reached camp. Naturally, all the time we had been on the look-out for larger craft going towards camp, but now we had the pleasure of seeing a L.C.(T.) approaching us. Both Gregg and I scrambled to the topmost part of the khisti, shouting and waving our berets. Fortunately, we were spotted and after some manipulation by the burra-khistiwallah we were able to scramble on board the L.C.(T.) and then had the khisti towed to camp. We arrived in camp about 7-30 p.m. Often I had run down or mounded about conditions

The Common Commando
(or Amphibious Tuffus)
by DiK

LAST month we promised you an article on Vipers. But, having now sworn to drink only Nimbapani, our preoccupation with multi-coloured snakes has departed and instead we introduce a new series on Army Animals and Service Serpents.

Our first subject, the Common Commando, may usually be found near the sea. It is quite at home in the water where it puffs and grunts a good deal and occasionally gives vent to a strangled cry something like “Getcha footoota mylace.”

The Amphibious Tuffus, as the Ancient Romans laughingly called this engaging creature, is commonly a brown job in European areas. In the past however he takes on an exotic green tinge, with some occasional flesh-coloured areas covered with red spots. The bright green poll, a noticeable characteristic of the European type, is, in India, replaced by a larger brown poll which retains only a band of green. This is known as a Pugri Tropicalis.

Reactions to the Common Commando vary considerably. In the U.K. it is known as a gentle animal only occasionally roused to (Continued on page 25).

"What are we on for dinner?"

"Soup, roast duck, roast potatoes, green peas, and pineapple and banana salad."

"Sounds quite filling for a change."

"Is the fly-proof lov. ready yet?"

"Hardly. Difficulties have arisen as to whether the Combined Ops sign should be painted on the top of the lid or underneath."

"Jack says that as they haven't any G 1098 a certain Cdo must be going back to England for the second front."

"I think we should have a darts match—Officers 'B' versus Seniors 'A'."

"These natives like us you know."

"Has anyone heard the news?"

"Here's the latest from Calcutta. Mission Successful."

"Personally I'm quite content to stay here for six months."

"Jack says a certain Cdo is on his way back to England for the second front."

"Don't we ever get anything different for dinner?"

"It's the second time this week we've had duck."

"Are you sure we are drawing our full rations?"

"I think the Japs will get Kohima yet."

"How many S.E.A.C.'s have we had today? Surely there should be sufficient for each of us to have a copy."

"I've never found anything so uncomfortable as a tent to sleep in."

"Jack says that the recent personnel discharged from units are neither unit nor over age, but have been sent back to England to set up an Adm. H.Q. for the second front."

"The mood around this place is simply appalling, somebody should do something about it."

"There go the lights again. Damn this confused electric system."

"Try tapping the bulb."

"Don't offer idiotic suggestions."

"Who fired that shot?"

"I wasn't me."

"This duck does taste peculiar."

"My dear fellow, don't complain, after all being on short rations is a cross we all have to bear."

"The only entertainment we get here is splashing the natives as we drive past."

"Jack says that an advanced H.Q. has been set up in England, and that we shall be back there within the next two months for the second front."

"What about a spot of fishing tomorrow?"

"Fishing always brings back unpleasant memories to me. I remember saying last time that if I wasn't so busy I'd take off my tunic and damned well—!"

"Yes, but what stopped you old chap?"

"I absolutely refuse to eat any more of this animal-infested bread."

"Jack says he knows who possesses the three best—!

"Yes! Go on old man."

"Who are the other two?"

"Jack says that if you get malaria fourteen times, you will be sent back to England in time for the second front."

"I'm looking forward to those 25 bags of mail tomorrow."

"Me too."

"Well, duty tomorrow, another busy day. Good night to you."

"Good night old man."

The Common Commando

anger. But in certain European countries, and in Japan, it is looked upon with horror and loathing, not unmixed with a certain fear. Why these reactions are so different there is no room to explain.

Other characteristics of the Common Commando are its great thirst and capacity for liquid foods, and its enthusiasm for long journeys on its flappers, which are known as boarding trunks.

These characteristics are all shared by the two subdivisions of the species, namely the Redshanks and the Armadillo. There is little difference between the two types as far as the casual observer is concerned, although each is inclined to think itself better than the other. Although a certain amount of Lineshootin', as it is called, goes on between them they invariably turn a united front to members of any other species.

In conclusion it may be said that the Common Commando has been found particularly useful in the extermination of various types of vermin, notably the Wehrmachts Nazis (or Germanicus Horribilis) and the Common Yellow Slug (or Japonica Unmentionabilis).

Next month : The Lesser Striped Lancejack (or Harja Corporalis).

A newspaper report says that in a London cinema loudspeakers are being placed all over the auditorium. In the "Crown" they usually sit just behind us.

Talking of the "Crown"... the rumour that white women have been going there lately has been traced to the management who were hoping to build up trade.
Danny and Delysia

by

PIZI

But he wisnae sae drunkken but he got a guid look at Delysia, an' efter that he let the battle alone, an' joined the boys in the front stalls Fridays an' Saturdays regular fer he wanted verra conscienusness forither days.

Noo, this Delysia Adams didnae huv long legs fer nothin', an' she ust tak bob oot wi' yin fella efter another. In fact whit she didnae ken aboot men wisnae worth a penny. It wisnae like Danny, however, tae be doonlifterd bi a thing like that. In these days he huv nice curly broon hair, an' shiny teeth, an' he huv been weavin', as they say, 'You are the man,' says Delysia botty-totty-like, who hung out the box last week, and was sick, are you no?' But Danny wisnae pit aff by that. Jabsbin a wee fat fella, who wis Sir Robert something or other in the belly, he took the dame oot in a taxi simply by bawin oot 'Make way fer the Evening Mirror!' Make way fer the Evening Mirror! an' pullin' her efter him.

Delysia wis no verra pleased, ye might ken, when she fand oot she wisnae a reporter after a', but he wis a nice lookin' ladde wi' a broad grin, an' aie she cauld him an impudent wally, an' agreed tey huv a bote wi' him efter a'. The funny thing wis Danny wrote hit a' doon the day efter an' got three guineas frae the Evening Mirror fer it, an' he wrought it sae favourable-like that Delysia wis tickled tae death, an' agreed tae gang oot wi' him next Sunday.

Ah weel, older men than Danny M'Gonagle hid tak 'em fer Delysia, an' when the moon shone doon the hill thro' the bonnie birk trees on the Cathkin Braes, Danny forgot himself, an' takin' her intae his arms kisst her unth the coos can hame. At least he kisst her until the next Sunday an' then he got a clep on the heid, an' wis paid aff! That wis yie the lassies wye, ye ken.

Maist young men wis huv tak an' aw the rogs at this, but then Danny wis oot o' the usual run in young men. He hid spirit, an' he hid brains. The first he got frue his Irish paw, an' the second frae his canny Scottish maw. The result wis that he said 'Damn me, but I'll no get the push frue a lassie like that fer nothin.' So he wisht her o' the best wi' her nex' huv, a big golfin' body frae Kellermoor, an' then walked aff as cool as a cucumber. I tell ye Delysia wisnae used tae boys like that, an' as she watched him go she felt gee queer.

'Purple Primroses' (that wis whit the show wis cried) bid entered its last glorious week when suddenly in the personal columns of the Evening Mirror a maist interesint’ para wis intorduced. It said ‘My darling, please forgive me, I know now you are the one I really love. Please come back, Saturday night, to Delysia.’ An’ believe me, there wisnae twa ladys cried Delysia in Glesca!

Well, Saturday night’s hoose at the auld Queen’s wis a crush an’ no mistake. The manager ’e think kent there wis something in the air, for ther was quite a few bobblies bobbin’ about, an’ the twa commissioners hid a big bashit faced chap as a raincoat. Delysia wis real bonnie that night, an’ the swing of her long legs brought a laughter and a few thrupplees—but she looked real nery. AN’ nac water, fer after the last lucky bid had been pushed up wit a crowd gathered bagstage. The big golfin’ body wis tryin’ fer tae force his wy past the chuckers-out, an’ the wee Sir Robert body wis arguin’ the toss wi’ a big Sir Robert body. Ye’ve never seen sick a crowd. There wis retiried Colonels frae Colntraive, an’ long hair’d artie boys frae Ardill. There wis a priest frae Manchester, an’ a wheen jawbones frae Newcastle an’ Leeds; mercinists, lawyers, doctors, stock brokers, commercial travellers, professional boxers, all-in-wrestlers—an’ a jockey; big business men, wee business men, men frae every part o’ the U.K. interculdin’ a guid few wha had flown special like ower frae Paris—gosh, wha a stramach!

Somebody, an’ despite whut he says he thinks it wis Danny, then began the cry ‘It’s a jape. We’ve been HAD—an’ then a chuckle went thro a winder. They were aft.

In rac time at a’ the commissioners wis flat on the grun, altho’ not afore big ‘bashit-face’ kid pit his hand doom the golfin’ body’s thrupple an’ twisted, his tussils, an’ then they wis tryin’ fer tae push the doors in. They set fire tae the auld Queen’s that night, did Delysia’s auld flames, an’ a bonnie fire it wis too. In the middle o’ a’, however, Danny McGonagie walks intae the auditorium where Delysia an’ the manager an’ the rest wis cryin’ their eyes out on the floor. ‘It’s that blasted adver in the Evening Mirror whit’s done this,’ cried somebody. ‘Wait till I get the wha pit it in,’ cries Delysia stampin’ her little feet on the grun. But nobody paid any heed, fer at that moment that terrific explosion frae the boilers shock the whole building. ‘O Danny, Danny!’ cries Delysia, scacin’ him statin there as cool as a cucumber, the only man in the place. ‘What will we do? What will we do, Danny?’ Danny came ower, an’ takin’ her by the shoulders stared fiercely into her face. ‘I’ll get ye out,’ he said, ‘I’ve got a car at the lane at the side. It’s a pitty yer other lovers hivnae got a brain awat a’ them.’ O Danny sobs Delysia on his kist (an’ this time she wisnae as actin’), ‘Get me oot o’ here, an’ I’ll dae anything ye say.’

So he took her out, an’ they got merrit. Honest. Well, whut’ll ye hiv?”

The Padres’ Column

"CAST your burden upon the Lord, and He will sustain thee. That is a wonderfully comforting sentence. All the more so when there are so many witnesses. What was it, thou knowest, sustained Peter, big, bluff, energetic tough Peter, to become the meek and sincere minister of God? What supported him, moreover, when his life was in danger, and they led him away to crucify him? Yes, it was the courage of God. And we need that courage, not just for the battlefield, but to help us live the monotonous everyday life we are living most of us now. I had a letter from the Burma front, which said "After our first casualties, more of us became Christians than you would have ever dreamed!" At first sight, that seemed a very poor effort—only to cast your burden on the Lord when death is staring you in the face! But I don’t think so. It is rather evidence of something that is unseen—seen even to us—that deep in our hearts we know there is a soul, strange and beyond our understanding and craving for power to achieve goodness! Stripped of every superficiality on the field of battle, God is only too happy to find you turning in a last resort to Him. It is much much harder for those who are being back in the rear, browned off to the world, to find a faith in the promises of Jesus Christ, however. We very soon find our hearts filled with dirt and despair. Will you cast that burden on the Lord, then? Peter did, and it made all the difference to his happiness during training. Then when he went up into the front, he didn’t waver.

THIS day Hon. Lieut. Myasaki saying unto me “You taking my pants and washing same this instants, or even quicker. Start weaving, thou image of laziness.” I thinking “Even so, Hon. Myasaki, this humble person knowing full well it is not disastrous jungle sickness that causing Hon. pants to require washing. It is but advent of cursed Commandos in neighbourhoods—they causing Hon. Myasaki great distressfulness.” Notwithstanding, I answering in humble tones and proceeding with pants to chaming. This is most distasteful job, but presently I finishing, and hanging hons pants up on bush for purpose of dryfulness.

“Now,” I meditating, “if damned Commandos attacking this position, what of Hon. Myasaki’s pants?” This giving me foods for thought. Therefore, according to hons training, I treating situation according to hon. military manners, thusly: Hon. Object: To protecting Hon. Myasaki’s pants.

Hon. Factors to asserting malignant or benign influence on situation:

1. Enemies: So detestable Commandos. Strength: Possibles up to twenty men. (They being armed with rifles, tommyson automatic guns, pistols and light-automatons.)

2. Owns Troops: Hon. 1. Strength: One. (Me being armed with one rifle and bayonet.)

Conclusions: Situations if attacked not very propitious for this humble person.

3. Disposals of troops:

Enemies: Not knowing whereabouts of they.

Own Troops: Beneath biggish bush (with hon. sitting too lazy to removing) and within 15 yards of Hon. Myasaki’s pants. I am long ways from home base.

Conclusions: This humble person having to run like anything if attacked.

4. Hon. Morale: They:

Not knowing, but not equals to a son of Nippon.

1. Uncertain, like unto parson’s egg.

Conclusions: Not mattering a damn anyway.

5. Communications: By hon. runner (same being this humble persons).

Conclusions: I not wanting to communicating anyways.

Conclusions: This persons inner man’s needing additional sustenances pretty soon.

Hon. Courses Open to:

1. Enemies: (a) To coming up chaming from south and snatchin pants before I fully comprehending.
(b) To sneaking up on east side of chaming and filching pants full with holes from close range.

2. Owns Troops: (a) I snatchin pants and running alike anything for home base. (b) I snatchin pants and jumping in chaming. (c) I snatchin sweet funny pants and saving own skins. I defending pants to last round and last man (same being hon. 1).

Hon. Plans:

1. If I seeing enemies first, I taking pants and running for home.

2. If they seeing me first, I having batted anyways.

3. If I getting away and having to leaving pants to enemies, I telling Hon. Lieut. Myasaki I losing same in chaming whilst washing.

4. If enemies filling pants full with holes from distance, I lying low and finally taking same luck as hon. evidence of so courageous fight I putting up.

Having prepared self thusly for unpropitious and surprieful eventualties, I falling fast to sleep, and waking later to finding Hon. Myasaki’s pants full with dryfulness. Therefore, taking same, I wending way homeside rejoicefully, thinking Hon. Ancestors for guarding this so righteous son of Nippon. This concluding diary for this month.

NICKNAMES
Here are nicknames, can you tell their proper ones?

(For answers see page 35)
LAST month the main topic was leave and we hope you all enjoyed it. For some, it brings back pleasant memories of previous leaves at home, but a few others remember some queer or riotous leaves abroad. For instance, there was the commando who was flown to Canada by a friend in the air-ferry service. He spent his leave with an uncle who had a pretty big ranch—sheep, fruit, truck gardening and all that kind of stuff. Well, not wanting to waste his time, and knowing a bit about sheep—having bought some lamb chops once—he offered to relieve a shepherd while he went into town for a drink or two. "You gotta be pretty spry on this job, son" said the shepherd before he left—but I'll be back afore dark to git them sheep in the pens, don't worry." So off went the shepherd on his way rejoicing, and the commando was left in sole command. Howsoever, the old-timer stopped in town longer than he had intended and came back in the moonlight all het-up with anxiety. What was his astonishment, however, to find all the sheep safely in the pens and a dripping commando (sweat—not the usual drip) grinning from ear to ear. "Well, I'll be gir-dammed!" exclaimed the old man. "How'd you manage that?" "Easy" said Bill, "but I must admit the lambs made me sweat a bit." "Lambs, what lambs? this ain't lambin' season," snorted the shepherd. "Come and look" said Bill, "there's nearly a hundred in this pen, count 'em." The old-timer took a good look, then turned to Bill, "Feller," he said slowly, "I'll tell the world you're spry, them 'lambs' is jack-rabbits."

The worst of leave is the way it runs away with money, as Mose Franklin discovered when he went home for a week's leave. When the local preacher asked him to subscribe to the organ fund, he felt things were going a bit too far. "Ya' revere," he said, "all a' got is debts, debts, debts, ever since ya' came on leave." "Mose" said the preacher sternly, "you' all owe de good Lawd plenty." "Yassuh," answered Mose quickly, "but de good Lawd don't press me like ma other creditors does."

Talking about bills, here's an unfortunate case—

An R.Q.M.S. from Manchester met Blondes, Smashing, One Title, Hester,
Now it's Bills, Weekly, Twenty, and Kids, R.Q.s, Plenty—
He wishes he hadn't cared for 'er.
And here's a touching little rhyme that will remind you of home and the joys of home life:

"Go quietly, and just take a peep at our 'baby," said Mrs. Joe Heep.

"An hour went past, and his missus at last
Found the nipper had sung him to sleep.

That reminds us of the young courting couple who fell out over some trivial matter. The young man had to call on the girl's father in the course of his business, and was a bit taken aback when the girl herself came to the door. Recovering himself quickly, he put on a very distant manner and asked "Is Mr. Smith in, please?" "No," she answered with equal politeness, "he's out at the moment." Then, as the young man turned to go— "Who shall I say called?" No doubt he had good cause to get a drip on that remark—but anyway, it's surprising how one thing leads to another. A simple thing like a kitchen table can lead to a lot of surprising things, for instance—

There was a young fellow who landed in a field with only a table-cloth for a parachute. Naturally the local constable wanted to know all about it—where he came from, why the table-cloth, etc., so young Wilbur started to enlighten the onlookers.

"It happened this way," he said.

"The Wright brothers claimed that even a table could be made to fly if you powered it sufficiently, so we screwed a motor bike engine to the kitchen table and fixed a prop to it." "But what about this yer table-cloth?" interrupted the limb of the law. "I'm coming to that," said Wilbur calmly. "Now, as I was saying, we fixed a prop and put wheels on the table legs, but the power wasn't great enough, and although she went all right on the flat, she wouldn't take off, so we fixed up a small airplane engine and sure enough the table became airborne." "But wot aboot this yer blinkin' table-cloth and you lan'cin' with it?" persisted the copper. "Don't get excited, I'm leading up to that," said Wilbur. "Well, we cruised about a bit and, as luck would have it, ran into a flock of migrating ducks. The feathers flew all ways and two ducks got wedged in the engine and started cooking. We found a pound of hard and some pepper and salt in the table drawer, so we basted the ducks and when they were nicely browned—" "But WOT ABAHT THE RUDDY TABLE-CLOTH?" howled the bluebottle. "Tkst! Tkst! Constable—please be patient," said Wilbur. "As I was saying, we also found the table-cloth knives and forks in the drawer, so we laid the table and set the ducks. I ate so much, I was ashamed to relate, that I belched, and father told me to leave the table. Not thinking where I was, I stepped back and just had time to grab the table-cloth as I fell—and here I am."

BUS-T.

Sounds a bit screwy to us, but we've got an even screwier yarn for next month. Perhaps some of you London lads (mis-print, should be lads) remember Ike Rosenblom wet his feet in the Quick-step-on-collars-run-how-the-stand-down-Caledonian-Market? The other day he was seen standing at the bus stop. He had a dazed look in his eyes, and was fumbling aimlessly in his pockets. Well, the relieving bus conductor and his driver came up, and asked what was the trouble. "You look as if you'd lost your wallet" says Tom Davies, the conductor. "Oi, Oi, I have lost mine wallet, Oi, Oi, Oi," moans Ike. "Have you looked in all your pockets?" the driver wants to know. "Yes, yes, I've looked everywhere," says Ike—then adds in a faint voice, "except in my inside vestcoa pocket." "Well, why don't you look in there?" says Tom in astonishment. "Because—" mutters Ike slowly, "because—if I look in that pocket and it ain't there—I'll—drop—dead!!"

And to round off this month's box, here are three touching little rhymes that will bring tears to your eyes. They concern a couple of army commandos and a Bootneck, and present touching testimony of "Love at first sight," "Vain regrets," and "Reincarnation."

in our camp, but I must say I was really glad to be back there that night. I don't think I even asked in sorting the mail as there were many willing hands considering this was the first decent mail for six weeks. My toils were not in vain as I was rewarded with quite a number of letters.

No doubt, when the Brigade Commander visited Rear Headquarters, he told you all where we were, and what we had been doing up to that time. Perhaps I can now fill in some of the little gaps.

Life has not been a bed of roses, but it has had its moments. Football has played a large part in passing away our leisure hours, and at one period we very nearly "took the field" with a rugger team. Unfortunately, sufficient players were not forthcoming—perhaps this isn't surprising after we saw Officers and Other Ranks of 99 engaged in a "bloody"—audacious—battle. However, one day we may be able to muster a team.

Brigade H.Q. football team, comprised of men from Sigs, Engineers, and the remaining portion of H.Q., has been busy collecting wins. In one match against the R.A.F., they won 7–1; against the Officers and S.N.C.O.s on two occasions, they won 7–2 and 7–1 respectively. Capt. C. C. Burchett by the way has scored two goals! Perhaps the Officers and S.N.C.O.s would do well to take a tip from the natives, and play bare footed. The results may then be different.

Entertainment has not been entirely lacking from the variety side either. Elvis and Doris Water paid us a visit, and gave a delightful show. Pass the punchbowl!

Fixtures of a sort are close at hand, and many's the chip that has been spent there. Still, if it hadn't been for this small cinema, life would have been very dull.

It is the usual thing to mention promotions, etc., in this type of article, so we would like to join with you at Rear H.Q. in congratulating C.S.M. Pegler on his well-deserved promotion. A bit late, Johnny, but better late than never. And now it's your turn to join with us in congratulations to Sgt. Arthur Lear, on his elevation to the "stripes'" mess.

We were all very sorry to hear that Capt. Panmure (Thick Hal) had gone into hospital. Here's wishing you the best from all at H.Q. May you soon be fit and well again!

Well, I hope that this small contribution will bring us yet another step closer together, and that it will provide a little interest for other readers of the third jungle Book. Sorry, I can't tell you more!

Cheerio for this month from Advanced Brigade H.Q.
TROOP NOTES

1 TROOP

OPINION—The Brig's speech proved quite entertaining (quite apart from the fact that he suffered from prickly heat). But I wonder why we all stopped breathing when he mentioned our destination!

FLASH—We regret to announce that Mr. Davidson has been admitted to hospital. Rumour has it that he has got there out of his turn!

HATS OFF TO—Pte. Cross—or rather the stool. Baby boy born on March 13, 1944. Good luck Cross and let's hope he hasn't started work before you get home.

STAGE—Preparations for the Troop Concert are now in full swing. Judging from the rehearsals it should be pretty original. Your old friend Fitzgerald of "Royal Oak" fame together with Sgt. Payne (Steeple Bumpstead's own) will be there to entertain you. Luck out for temperamental J. Sowrey who might be too cool to perform if his Charpy Drill interferes with it.

TRAVEL—Leave at last, oh boys—here's fourteen days—go where you like—do what you like—forget you were ever called "poor blighters." Isn't that price Mr. Morrison's stay at home holidays now!

SPORT—Our solemn of the jungle has justified itself if only because no one in the Troop is "rusty" in his shooting. Take the case of a man Ray. Which reminds me of still talk of that boy Roberts with bated breath. The Troop swimming team is now a formidable one especially with our new acquisition L/Cpl. Taylor. Heaven help the Troop that has the audacity to challenge us.

THE THIRD JUNGLE BOOK

SPORT—Our old rivals 6 Troop played us at soccer the other day. We were leading 1 to 0 but halfway through the ball burst and 6 Troop was saved from inevitable defeat.

4 TROOP

SPORT—Anxiously and as a poor but willing unit the Troop cricket team made the final of the knockout competition. Our opponents were the Officers. The Officers' bowling was below par which was hit at will. A good all-round display by Capt. Kinghorn was one of the points and only redeeming feature of the match.

STAGE—The concert put on by 4 Troop a few weeks ago was a splendid performance. I think the turn which made the show a success was the fine display by Mewitt, one holding wrestler, and Sgt. Jackson, the renowned boxer. It seems there was a slight argument between the two contestants as to who would be the most efficient in a rough house. I think Mewitt proved the point although Jackson was a tough proposition. This unique display of Boxy a. Wrestler was greatly novel.

L/Cpl. Lloyd's rendering of Star Dust would have made Bing grieve with envy, and whistled Joe Smith and his Gang were good because their jokes were new and well placed. "Pongo" the mad Tarzan with his weird yells and body display would have made Dorothy Lamour quake in her shoes. C.S.M. Brown's Max Bacon act on the 11 Commandments was top notch. Finally, Freddy Whitten tackled the bones in his inimitable way—and did that community singing him. The show ended with a speech by the C.O. who was impressed enough to give us the next morning off.

6 TROOP

PROMOTIONS—One of the Troop's proud boasts is "the right man in the right place." An excellent example of this is to be found in No. 2 Cookhouse in the form of Trooper Williams who, as Royal armored Corps' going into the attack on a varied array of cans with the ever popular tin opener.

The fact that Sgt. Westley's wife has moved to a larger house on his promotion to Full Sergeant is now said to deter Trooper N.C. from mentioning the sleight of Acting R.M. in order to prevent negotiations on the part of his wife with the view to a Castle in England.

HEADQUARTERS

"Good Old H.Q."

The Brains Department Boo!!

Boo!!

Well, I wonder if we can make H.O. notes interesting enough for those dull men to buy it; judging from previous sales it has to be mighty interesting before they will fork the price of half a measly cup of choke-poor show, chaps. Ah, well, here's hoping sales rise in H.Q., a 100 per cent. on the next issue.

Naturally everyone does more than their share in H.Q. (load Casually from all Troops) so we don't get a great deal of time to proceed to that glorious holiday resort nearby. Did I hear someone say it was a... awful place—dear, dear 1

Individually there is not a great deal of news this month, but I feel we cannot let this go by without congratulating Bombardier M. Williams on becoming a Daddy. One look at him makes one wonder how he managed it, but there it is, a lopsided daughter arrived and believe me has put new life into his father's many arguments. (Who said Gummer argues?)

Another bright occasion was the return of our distinguished "Snake Charmer" (Sgt. Hustwick) from hospital where I believe he received the best reports from the Pathé newsreel team. He is back on top of his form killing the camp's trouble-some reptiles right and left and we feel much safer.

Pte. Bridwell, Allen of the Medical Section, L/Cpl. Smith of the Sigs, Pte. Brown and Gun. Brennan have all returned from Restalrig during the month and are back at their respective posts again. Oh I mustn't forget L/Cpl. Bidcock of the I Section (the perfect gentleman); he also found his way back from hospital... by compass route no doubt.

Well, that's about all I can think of for this issue. By the way it's the old Chief Clerk speaking (Brown's the name) and I haven't minded putting these few notes together, but next month let's have a L.Q. article in this magazine—interesting enough to send to the folks at home. So let me have the news from each section—Cheerio for now!

H.Q. TROOP

Amid the Basias and Bananas of this Troop the Jungle has come to stay, Marines Ginger Haynes and "Dagwood" Hondru returned triumphantly from EXERCISE BANGALORE with a couple of monkeys. The Sikh Bay staff, headed by Capt. Scholky, have attempted to match atmosphere in the animal world with a couple of lively guys who, I understand, are about as discerning as the average wag. Perhaps an aspirin would help!

Doc. Cockson, also Sikh Bay staff, cut a real coper and went to town in a big way at the Mayfair Café, BANGALORE, and walked (or jodha) off with a real Silver Cup for jodha-bugging. Was those Yanks mad? "Doc" get his name in the paper for this, so that we did get at least one honourable mention in the BANGALORE local rag.

Anyone in the China restaurant one night last week could have heard loud cheers from the dining room mingled with the clanging of jaws. The cause of it all was Marine "Zokey" Henderson who, with a dignity of a man very happy (if rather drunk), had ordered chop suey AND chop sticks. The Chinese crowed round and goggled but Anglo-Chinese relations were well established that night.

In an exciting Tanga Race with about 30 tonnes, which took place between "The Crown" and H.Q. the other night, L/Cpl Ted Orr, "The Wimnrah" with loud cries of "Tallyho!" only to find his main-driven wag spoke the truth. Ted was amazed to see a wag, and not knowing quite what to do, placed six annas on his eyelids and turned in.

Ratch-Kaly dancing has not, in recent weeks, found favour with everyone as had seen it in the various cinemas in MADRAS, etc., but Marine Tom Cooke has become a passionate devotee, and the effect is very startling. On stand-off moments he can be observed wriggling around and winking his eyes avidly and with obvious pleasure.

The age of chivalry is dead. Marines Joe Price and a certain Skipper spent much of their leave organising dances at SECUNDERABAD for the local nurses and other females. The whole affair was a grand success to such an extent that Joe Potts won one of his own prizes.

THE THIRD JUNGLE BOOK

The long, lean figure of Dick Barrett has become longer and leaner after his recent visit to the Massage Centre in BOMBAY. What exactly goes on in this centre we are not quite clear about, but I am assured that it is just off the place for jungle-fey Marines to go to...

A TROOP

LEAVE NEWS FLASH—Messrs. Andrew, Grady and Frank loco to the town of SECUNDERABAD and brought back a fully detailed report. Numbers of "B" Troop members, acting on this information, were soon seen heading west.

Money must have been a bit short in BOMBAY—the blood bank seems to have done a good trade. Several members were observed staggering down the hospital steps, counting out bundles of fifteen chips. It was noticeable that some of those who tried this luck had not even a pin left to sell!

SECRET SERVICE—Our special reporter, snooping around the race track at SECUNDERABAD at 9am this morning,发现了Shah's new horse, Lucas staggering round and round the track, clutching a half-empty bottle and singing softly to himself. There's a long way to go after that. Finally got his head down with the sweepers just before the first race.

"Jed" Allen came back all same Chinese army, sporting a red umbrella and a standing pass to "up-homers" in BOMBAY.

"B" TROOP

During recent operations in BANGALORE, Bottling B suffered minor casualties and withdrew later in the week owing to shortage of liquid supplies. Old Ben Baxter spent a few days in dock and came out sporting a driver which he hung out of his jaw, though it didn't hamper him any. L/Cpl. Richmond managed to get "up-homers". Well, he is good looking. "Salut" Willcock spent 14 days of his leave travelling to and from KARACHI, so he only had a few days with his brother, but sent the Indian railways! I noticed that "B's" attend-ace at all these films was high, too. Nothing else in line. Let's have a look.

To finish off, I'm told the M.P.'s breathed a great sigh of relief when we eventually left. I wonder how many of "B" Troop will go to BANGALORE again for leave?

W TROOP

"LEAVE LEVITIES"—So that was leave. We who went to BANGALORE can now enjoyably and soberly (?) look back and hand bouquets and/or breathlessly to those who kept added enjoyment to our spell of liberty.

We take off our hats to those who indulged in an orgy of fancy dress buying, and we proudly present the first bouquet to Ralph Haynes for that tatty blue shirt and grey transier effect. It is rumoured that Mr. Haynes bought more power for himself than the rest of the Troop did for their pursers. The second bouquet goes to Stanley Ashman for getting started with the tatty tie. (Who mentioned the fifth form at St. Joseph's?)

But enough of this hilarity. Let us be serious and ask where Messrs. Carr, Cooney, O'Regan and Barfield went with the wag that dark night? They didn't. Did they really? The devils. Carr—he didn't give the perfect impression of a clarinet player in Furnell's or doesn't he remember?

We remember, however, the love light in Dalley's eyes as he gazed over the mile long counter, exclaiming with delight. I always said that girls — Quite! Quite. And don't we remember how Ron Ward was sent to stroll up and down South Parade twenty-five times an evening just to keep his feet in trim.

Fred Johnston came back from SECUNDERABAD looking like a walking art show, with "Pete" Peterson and "Hop-along" Fountain as side shows.

Finally, we have the honour to announce that W Trop did NOT bring back a monkey.

I X TROOP

They said it was leave, and so eventually, it was. But oh, my gawd! The hows and whines that rent the air when standing knee-deep in mud (well, our shoes were muddy), we waited for the M. and S. M. train. (That, by the way, is the same bestowed on it by the railway company we have our own.)

To cut a long story short, after we had taken the splinters from our trousers, and walked through a three days' collection of "gash" we found ourselves in that Mecca of the boys in India, BANGALORE, and were welcomed with open arms by the Camp Adjutant, in terms vaguely reminiscent of our Achnacarry welcome. "Aye your 'at on the amblers in the ait!"

Then came the rush by "herts," "yobs," corporals, and etc., to find the nearest China Eats House. Me, I sneaked into Funnel's, and cultivated the gin and lime habit, hanging back in a wicker chair and calling "heater" in a toffyfie voice.

The Chinese restaurants must be well down in their stocks of cutlery, crockery, etc., and besides the boys sent to amuse the folks at home.

Some of us had a bit of sport, purchasing camiknicks and other fanfics for the wives and mothers back home. We learnt a bit about barking with the cross-legged, two-timing merchant who made us pay three times the price out of our hard-earned marins.

"Taxi 265" and "The Coconut Grove" may bring back a few faint recollections to some of the boys. Believe me, ladies, you didn't live till you've tasted the nuts in the "Grove"! They beat even the nuts from Barcelona.

A certain member of "X" Troop had a green beret made to measure because he'd lost his own, elsewhere. The duel had to rip the top off a billiard table to get the material.

We're all alone now, and sitting down to the old prickly heat again, with a baker's dozen or so of monkeys as a reminder of leave.

"Y" TRUP

This bunch of scallywags (commonly known as boys of the "Lazy Y") needs no introduction, being well known as the naughtiest blokes in the command.

To get down to a few of the Troop personalities, we have our first good authority that "Yank!" Johnson is firmly convinced he's the only man eligible for fatigue in the Troop, and is fobbed off when he fails to see his name up for a job. He may then be seen walking away muttering to himself disdainfully.

"Fasher!" Bark is rumoured to have broken his habit of silence, and engaged in an argument on leave. However, this takes some believing.

Young Donald, of the "Wooden Leg" team, guarded the camp faithfully while his opposite number downed the month's beer, on leave at BANGALORE. That's why we've been seeing Les and Les of Woodcock, Poor show. Poor show.

"William-the-Dovey"—the old beer bound—spent his leave crying his eyes out in a Chinese restaurant, because the girl at the desk looked like a hermaphrodite to him.

"Spotted Horse" in Wapping.

Set Roberts was seen (this is only hearsay, Robby!) mixing flour in the back of an Italian bakery at BANGALORE. Shames of such.

Horrible rumours drifted back after the leave train had departed; White had cut the guard's throat and hidden himself in the lavatory drainage! Tuber had uncoupled a coach and leered at a laddy in a first-class compartment, etc., etc. Luckily, it all turned out to be slightly exaggerated, as most reports are.

Setts, Staines, Rooper, and hard Rock Visitors descanted on SECONDSBAD, and kept the Chinese restaurants working overtime for a couple of weeks. They were in turn repaid by the Chinese restaurants when they returned.

So, this being the first real run ashore for the boys in some months, we hope they all lived up to the good old motto "C.E.W.T." or Total Enjoyment Without Trouble. Or is that too much to expect?

Owing to the large number of contributions submitted, it has been difficult to find a place for them all, and we find it necessary to reject with thanks a certain proportion of them. Try again; your next effort may be more suitable.

STORY BY J. COBB.

Contributions not quite suitable in style—Lay your eyes more carefully in the basket next time. Many thanks!

MY BIGGEST SCOOP—C. L. BAILEY. Much the same as above—try again but make it longer, Charlie.

AIR COMMUNIQUE—ATKINS. This had to be shelved as it didn't fit into any particular category. A good effort though.

POEMS "SECOND FRONT," etc.—J. K. M. Just not suitable. We get a lot of poetry and have to return a lot. Don't be so serious, however. It's only a war, this!

LAUGH WITH EL MUCK—R. H. M. We liked your idea of how to grow straight bananas—but, all over, this wasn't good enough.

THE THEATRE AND YOU—K. H. M. Too Highbrow—However, many thanks!

POEM "HYMN"—RED.

POEM "HEROES ALL"—K. M. Quit blowing our own trumpet! We know we're good! (You'll burst your beret one of these days, kiddie!)

That's all, snuggly, this month. Nighty night, sleep tight—

lest we forget ... peace

(memories of august 1939)

by l/cpl. barnes

i can see it now, that barren, lonely wind swept heath studded with yellow gorse. i used to lie there after the heat of a summer's day, undisturbed, peaceful in the tranquillity of a perfect english august evening . . . the silence broken only by the silvery tinkle of a lark as it sang winging its way heavenwards, the occasional "pop" of gorse pods as they ripened, burst and scattered their seed far and wide. how pleasant it all seems now! to lie there gazing at the sky and watching the sun lower in the west, lengthening the shadows into twilight.

the gorse pods would still "pop." the assiduous lark would come to earth, trill a few notes and lapse into silence. then in the fading light the stars would appear, first one, then two and finally countless thousands; then with the stars would arise fresh sounds—night sounds.

i remember how i used to listen, trying to analyse and decipher each symbol—the scream of the barn owl as it flapped in all its ghostly whiteness over the stubble searching for voles—the thump of rabbits in a nearby warren as they became active in preparation for their nocturnal feeding—the high, almost imperceptible squeaks of the field mouse—and far away the bark of a dog fox calling to its mate.

the dew would drop and i would finally rise wet and cold; the rabbits would scamper erratically to their burrows and i would stroll slowly to my cottage happy and content; little knowing how short-lived my happiness would be; little knowing what fate had in store for me.

the rev. roger clarke, bearded brigade padre, has lately been observed dining frequently in a certain officers' mess.

as someone said—a case of the prodigals dining the father.

rumour says that more beer is shortly due. i had six glasses of the last lot. three going down and three coming up.

after prolonged negotiations with commando committees the camp dhobi wallah has finally promised to crack no more rocks with shirts.

rumour overheard in a dining hall . . . one fly, hovering over the food, to another fly, "if they don't feed us better than this i'm going back to that r.a.f. station."
