GREEN VERTS
-------------

SURPRISE AND VIGILANCE.

It must be impressed upon all ranks that no matter what the situation may appear to be, there must not at any time, be lack of vigilance or any relaxation of the strictest precautions against surprise, sabotage and sniping.

21. RECOGNITION OF PYROTECHNICS

All ranks must clearly understand exactly what Pyrotechnics are being used in the Operation and be able to recognise them. Immediately upon any such recognition it is their duty to report to their Group Officer. There will be many confusing lights such as multi-coloured enemy tracer, own tracer, enemy pyrotechnics signals, fires caused by demolition or air raid and possibilities of parachute flares.

RUNNERS.

Runners will, when carrying messages, remember that speed combined with use of cover should be their proper method of movement. Apparently clear areas may harbour enemy.

23. RECOGNITION OF OWN TROOPS.

In this Operation the danger of Own Troops shooting up each other is at a maximum. It is therefore essential that every possible means of recognition should be understood and put into effect. The methods are set out in the INTERCOMMUNICATION para of the Operation Order and must be carefully studied and rehearsed. The use of surnames is a valuable addition to those methods and it is to be encouraged.

COVERING FIRE FOR LANDING.

Once surprise has been lost, under control of Naval Officer, the maximum fire power of all craft will be brought to bear on enemy gun positions, whether the enemy fire or not.

25. Use of Surnames

In all Sub Groups, the surname of the Sub Group Commander will be adopted by All Ranks within that Group, and will be continuous throughout the Operation even if Original Sub Group Commander has become a casualty.

26. Recognition

When Groups are in a concealed position, and they observe the approach of any troops, they will not only conserve their fire until the last minute, but will conserve their call for recognition until it should be possible from silhouette to ascertain whether friend or foe.

Casualties.

Officers Commanding Groups will understand their own individual task. It must be clearly understood by them that they must proceed with their tasks with the utmost determination and speed irrespective of casualties to other craft or units. This particularly applies during the approach.
